A Clergyman

Nervous Collapse, Brain Fog, Neuralgia—

For getting things done, making things go, the invigorating stimulus of Phosferine cannot be equalled, says the Rev. A. H. Field. Fully aware that as a clergyman he is bound to make use of the accuracy of his estimation of Phosferine, this gentleman states that, distinct from other cases, he has verified and tested the efficacy of the tonic himself. It was Phosferine, and Phosferine alone, he says, which raised him from the nervous collapse, remedied the brain-fog and neuralgia which held down his efforts and arrested his plans over a lengthy period. Since taking Phosferine he is entirely free from nervous distresses, and can put his whole heart and energies into his work, and indeed, such is his activity that he has roused many helpers to his cause. Experience has taught the Rev. A. H. Field that numbers of people do not realise their languor and half-hearted efforts are due to lack of nerve force, and he believes they will quicker appreciate the efficacy of Phosferine by learning of his own recovery.

Have No Existence Now.

Rev. A. H. Field, 336, Brompton Road, Walthamstow, writes: "It gives me much pleasure to testify to the beneficial effects of Phosferine in many cases of nervous disorder, where I have advised the use of your tonic. Some four years ago I myself had a nervous breakdown, and a friend advised Phosferine. I took his advice, and speedily found that I had acted wisely, for the neuralgic pains and the mental weariness soon took flight, and I was thoroughly braced up. Recently some members of my church, at my suggestion, tried the remedy, and were quite satisfied with the beneficial results. I have advised its use now for nearly four years, and in no case has it yet proved a failure. When one thinks of the great number of so-called nerve remedies, it is satisfactory to find at least one upon which reliance can be placed. I wish your Phosferine every success. When preaching away, I have noticed Phosferine finds a place in the village homes."

HEARING NON-EXISTENT SOUNDS.

Sounds that have no real existence are heard in some forms of ear disease, and a study of them and their remedies has been reported by Dr. Marage to the Paris Academy of Sciences. Three classes of sounds are distinguished: (1) Noises, including high-pitched hissing or whistling, the beating of the pulse, chirping or rustling, and confused rollings or rumblings; (2) musical sounds, such as sleigh bells, and other bells, drums, organ pipes and birds; and (3) words or vocal cries, among which are the shouts of a mob, the croaking of a frog, and the note of the cuckoo. In chronic deafness, sounds are heard chiefly by victims of sclerosis, or hardening of the auditory organs. Among such persons, two-thirds heard whistling alone, whistling combined with other sounds, or other sounds alone, including those of bells, birds, shells and the pulse. Whistling proves to be due to displacement of one of the three small ear bones, other sounds to persistent excitation of the nerves of hearing. In his treatment, Dr. Marage has applied the low-pitched vibrations of a vowel-siren to move the ear-bone slightly into place; high-frequency alternating electric currents to stimulate blood circulation and thus suppress the pulse sounds; and vibratory massage of the head in other cases—with good effect if the trouble is recent.

RADIIUM CURE RESULTS.

Inhalation of radium emanation two hours daily at a radium "emanatorium" is recommended by Prof. His for chronic rheumatism and gout; and he has found injections of radium charged fluid near the affected joint to be also advantageous. Of 100 persons with chronic rheumatism, 50 were benefited and 5 were cured; and of 23 with gout, 24 were much helped, some recovered, and only 4 showed no benefit.

AN EXTINGUISHED BUFFALO.

A huge buffalo with enormous horns is conspicuous in prehistoric rock drawings lately found in Algeria. The African elephant is also a striking feature, and other animals include the lion, leopard, gazelle, and domestic goats and sheep.

SOIL OIL FUEL FOR GAS ENGINES.

Light petroleum oil is now solidified into a whitish transparent jelly that is affirmed to have only about 80 per cent. of the bulk of the corresponding amount of liquid oil. This material not only has the advantage of lessened bulk, but is claimed to be simpler to use and safer to handle. If it becomes ignited, the flame can be easily extinguished with a piece of cloth. The substance is prepared by treating with hydrochloric acid some fatty acid like stearic, which is made very soluble, and then dissolving this in the petrol or gasoline, adding a certain amount of alcoholic solution of caustic soda at about 80 degrees C. On cooling, the mixture solidifies. To use with an internal combustion engine, the only carburetor necessary is a suitable rectangular iron box, in which the solid oil is placed in a perforated tray above the exhaust pipes, causing the air passing through the box to the engine to become thoroughly carbonated. An economy of 20 per cent. is explained as probably due to the less of unburned oil when the liquid is employed. The new product is adopted for other purposes, and has been especially recommended for motor-car lamps and other lighting.

THE WIND WONDER OF THE ALPS.

The Föhn is a warm, dry southerly wind of the Alps, resembling the Chinook of the Rocky Mountains. An observer at Innsbruck, the capital of Tyrol, reports that it sometimes blows northward with much force, raising clouds of dust, and that it makes the atmosphere stiflingly hot in summer and mild and close in winter, occasionally having a depressing influence on the nervous system. In 25 years, Dr. H. von Ficker has noted an annual average of 43 days of Föhn. Spring has 17 days, and there are 11 in autumn, and it generally lasts one or two days, but on two visits it has continued light days. It is this warm wind that gives Alpine regions maize, certain flowers, and other vegetation.

A GOLDEN OPPORTUNITY.

An English suggestion is that a fortune awaits the maker of a gold amalgam that shall be as plastic as copper, silver and other amalgams, and yet retain a true gold colour. Plain gold, consolidated by mechanical means alone, is still used for tooth fillings, and great care is taken to ensure absolute purity, as the slightest admixture with any other metal greatly lessens its adhesive properties.

BUTTERFLY MATERIALS.

Odour-yielding scales, somewhat heart-shaped with hump-like tips, are found on certain butterflies. Giving an account of these at the London Royal Institution, F. A. Dixey, F.R.S., stated that the scales appear only on the wings, and a camel hair pencil brushed over this surface takes up the special scent. The odiferous principle seems to be held in a cavity of the special scale. The odors are various, each species of butterfly having its own, and the agreeable ones resemble the perfumes of such substances as sweet brier, orris, root, lemon, sweet pea, honeysuckle and jasmine. Some butterflies, however, have disagreeable smells. In certain tropical and sub-tropical species they are particularly offensive, and suggest such substances as musty straw, stable litter, rabbit hutches, acetylene and bilge-water. The pleasant odours are supposed to play an important part in the relation of the sexes; the repulsive ones, to give protection against insect-eating enemies.

TELEGRAPHIC VISION.

The "electric telescope" on which Prof. Rosing of Berlin has been experimenting for five years, is claimed to promise us distant views of interesting occurrences, such as a theatrical performance, the evolution of an army on the field, and the movements of a submarine under water. As described, rotating mirrors bring the various parts of a scene successively before an opening in a diaphragm; and act on an alloy of potassium sodium or rubidium kept negatively electrified by a battery. The impact of light discharges the alloy continuously, thus producing the current that acts on the distant receiver. In this, the current from the alloy, by an arrangement of electro-magnets, causes a bundle of cathode rays to move over a fluorescent screen so rapidly that the successive fluorescing of the different parts gives a continuous picture, reproducing the view in front of the transmitter.

SOIL MATERIALS.

The organic matter in the soils and subsoils of the United States has been found by the Bureau of Soils to average 2.06 and 0.83 per cent. respectively. What was formerly known as humus has yielded about 20 organic substances belonging to 3 or 4 classes of chemical compounds, which exist in varying proportions in different soils. No one soil, however, contains all of these compounds.

THE HOUSE OF PENDREAR.

[By MILDRED WILCOX.]

CHAPTER XXXVII.

Mrs. Jennings' attempt to overtake Reta Mayne proving futile, the housekeeper re-traced her steps to the office.

"You have escaped me this time, my fine lady," she murmured. "But I will have you yet and find out what you overheard. I always disliked that girl. She got £2,000 out of the mistress that ought to have been mine, and now she will ruin me. But I will be even with her yet; she is not too clever for me."

For some time Mrs. Jennings continued, to mutter incoherently to herself, a hoarse, vacuous laugh now and then escaping her.

"I believe the old lady is going off her head," thought Tregonning, when next he saw her some days later. "She has never got over that illness of hers."

"Now, Mrs. Jennings," he said, aloud, "we can't have you looking so glum. You won't be able to come and dance at our wedding—Miss Harriet and mine, you know."

"Miss Harriet! So you have got her after all. Let us hope that you have done as good a day's work for yourself as you hope," she said darkly.

"There is no doubt about that, my good woman," replied he, drawing in his lips with a triumphant smile. "I'm a good judge of the fair sex, Mrs. Jennings. I can sum up their points at a glance; I am not to be taken in."

"And when is the wedding to be, sir?"

"The happy day is not yet fixed. We must leave that to the lady, you know. She is not at home at present, gone away for a little change. So much excitement and—er—happiness has been bad for her nerves."

"And so she has gone down to the sea?" suggested the housekeeper.

"I did not say the sea," he replied. "Just gone out of London, away from the maddening crowd and all that sort of thing."

"You might give me her address, I should like to be one of the first to write and congratulate her. I have known Miss Harriet some years, you see, sir."

"Quite so, quite so. A very natural and laudable desire, I am sure. Send your letter to me and I will see that she gets it. I am running down to Cornwall on business for a day or two, but I will forward the letter."

Miss Tremayne, care of J. Tregonning, Esq., Port Office, Seamen. That will be all right. Before long it will be Mrs. James Tregonning, eh?"

With an indrawn of the lips he took his departure.

Mrs. Jennings looked after him with a cunning smile.

"Running down to Cornwall, are you? Running after Harriet Tremayne, that is what you mean. She has gone down there to tell what she knows. And he has gone after her; does not like to trust her out of his sight for fear she should change her mind. I don't know whatever made her take him."

In a measure Mrs. Jennings' surmise was correct. Tregonning was going to Cornwall on Reta's account, but not so much to see her as to find her. Since the afternoon when he had failed to keep his appointment in Mr. Moss' office he had not heard anything of his fiancée. His enquiries from the Davenants having elicited the fact that her whereabouts were unknown to them, Tregonning came to the conclusion that she had gone to Seamen and resolved to seek her there. With Charles Pendrear's income as her own, she was a prize worth having, and Tregonning determined that she should not slip through his fingers.

"Egad!" he said, "we have had enough of this business of hide and seek. I will have the day fixed and the banns put up at once. I suppose I must enquire for her under the title of Charles Pendrear. It is a queer sort of show altogether."

With a laugh he pushed open the massive gates and walked up the drive.

Lizzie Polperne, bright and smiling, opened the door. She had just been entertaining Mr. and Mrs. Sims with an account of "Master's" visitors, one of them his own cousin, a young lady, and as like him as two peas.

Reta, with the aid of the faithful Lizzie, had slipped out of her male attire and had donned some woman's clothes which she had kept ready for emergencies. She was sitting in the library with the two men, when James Tregonning was announced.

"Do you mind seeing him, Miss Mayne?" Reta, I should say, as we are cousins?" said Charles Pendrear.

"I have no objection," she replied.

"Better see him and get it over," put in Davenant. "If he is insolent I shall be here to deal with him."

Tregonning entered the room with an air of aggressive assurance suggestive of his future proprietorship. As his glance fell upon Reta in her woman's dress, standing by Austin's side, his expression of complacency turned to one of surprised dismay. He wondered why Reta had assumed her own identity; what the "writing Johnnie" was doing there, and who was the young fellow gazing out of the window.

He could glean nothing from Reta's manner. She shook hands and remarked casually on the mildness of the weather. Davenant bowed stiffly, and neither introduced him to the other occupant of the room.

"Well, Harriet, my dear, how are you?" Mr. Davenant here, too. Quite a happy little family party! Hope I am not intruding."

He sat down on the nearest chair, obviously, it at ease, an ungainly-looking figure in a loud check suit. For a few moments there was an exchange of common-places; then Tregonning turned pointedly towards Reta:

"I should like a few words in private with you, Harriet," he said. "There are one or two little matters that we must discuss together."

"You may discuss them here," she said, calmly. "There is nothing we have to say that these gentlemen may not hear."

Tregonning gave a meaning laugh. "That is rather a curious thing for a girl to say to her lover. I am not accustomed to do my love-making in public, but still, my dear, if you have no objection to the presence of these gentlemen, neither have I."

He drew near and endeavoured to place his arm round her. Davenant started forward, about to speak, but Reta, adroitly avoiding Tregonning's embrace, silenced Austin with a look.

"They doubtless envy my privileges as her affianced husband," Tregonning added, with a leer.

"That is a little, Mr. Tregonning, I must ask you to relinquish. Under pressure and by means of threats I gave my reluctant consent to an engagement. It was wrong from me by force of circumstances, as you know all along, and I feel myself at liberty to withdraw it."

"Do you indeed, Madam?" he burst out. "You may feel at liberty, but you shall not break your promise to marry me without taking the full consequences. I do not think you will talk about liberty then. Once more I ask you, are you going to marry me, or are you not?"

"I am not."

"Very well, then. As these gentlemen appear to be in your confidence I may as well enlighten them still further. They probably do not know that for the last ten months or so your have been in the habit of personating Charles Pendrear, the heir to this estate, in order to obtain possession of his house and income. I can prove it and you dare not deny it, Madam."

Having made this announcement he looked round with an air of malicious triumph to see what impression it had had upon his hearers.

Reta looked at Davenant and he answered her with a calm, grave smile. The young man in the window was laughing softly to himself. The sound incensed Tregonning.

"It is no laughing matter," he spluttered. "What will the law have to say to a woman who dressed up as a man, and obtained his money under false pretences?"

"The law will not have anything to say to it."

"Indeed!" replied Tregonning. "And if I choose, as I shall do, to make public the facts of the case, who are you, pray, that you are going to prevent me?"

The young man left the window and came into the middle of the room.

As Tregonning caught sight of his face his own grew purple. His eyes almost started out of his head. Before the young man spoke he knew who he must be.

"I happen to be Charles Pendrear," he said. "The man you accuse my cousin of impersonating."

"Whom your cousin did impersonate. However much as she may try to hoodwink you I can prove that she is guilty. You have evidently been at your games again, my lady, and have got round this young man, and used him as your dupe. But I will expose you yet."

He put his hand on Reta's shoulder, and would have shaken her had not a sudden movement from Davenant sent him reeling across the room.

"Kindly keep your hands off Miss Mayne," he said, his grey eyes flashing.

"Unless you can speak respectfully I must ask you to leave my house at once," put in Pendrear.

"Your house, indeed," sneered Tregonning. "How do I know it is your house? You are all in league together, but I will expose you all."

"Pray do," said Pendrear, calmly. "I should be interested to know your plan of campaign."

"I shall at once inform the lawyers that the young man who passed himself off upon them as Charles Pendrear was in reality a woman."

"Do you think they would believe your word against mine? I should tell them you had no justification in making such a statement and the appearance of both myself and Miss Tremayne would make your tale incredible."

"I can prove the truth of it."

"I fancy not, Mr. Tregonning. Just look at the matter calmly."

Here both Davenant and Reta found it difficult to restrain a smile. Tregonning, stalking up and down the room, crimson in the face, his sandy locks woefully disarranged, certainly looked the reverse of calm.

"Supposing this story," continued Pendrear, "declaring that Miss Tremayne had passed herself off as me? I should at once refute all your statements, dismissing them as purely imaginary. You could not prove the contrary, and would place yourself in a difficult, not to say, ridiculous position."

Tregonning considered the matter, drawing in his lips in quick succession.

He at length regained his composure, and assumed his most impressive manner.

NERVOUS DEPRESSION HEADACHES—BILIOUSNESS CONSTIPATION CURED BY

Indigestion is perhaps the greatest affliction of the human race, and headaches, biliousness, constipation, wind, anemia, and nervous depression are its natural consequences. At all periods of life, you should specially guard against indigestion, for it strikes at the very foundation of your well-being, poisons your blood, and weakens your constitution. When that happens, anything may follow, for a weakened constitution cannot resist the germs of disease. Your best safeguard against all digestive disorders is the herbal tonic, Mother Seigel's Syrup. It tones up your stomach, liver and bowels, cleanses your system, increases your vitality, and renews your constitution. That is why it cures indigestion, with all the ills that follow in its train, and thus ensures good health. Try it! Mrs. Jepson, of Stone, Maltby, Rotherham, Yorks, says:—"We look upon Mother Seigel's Syrup as our family medicine, for our faith in it is unbounded."

THE HOUSE OF PENDREAR.

of man who would take as his wife a woman with such a past as yours."

"There you make a mistake, Mr. Tregonning," remarked Davenant. "I have already, knowing all, asked Miss Mayne to be my wife. The past is in her hands; the future will be in mine."

By this remark Tregonning rightly inferred that in the future any interference would be dealt by Davenant himself. He resolved to make the best of a bad job.

"Doubtless it is best as it is, after all," he said, grandiloquently. "Much as I admire our dear Harriet's charms of person it is character one looks for in a wife, and there, I should have been disappointed. So very—shall we say—versatile?—a wife person would be rather a responsibility. I trust it will not press too heavily upon you. I fear the management of such a wife will prove a difficult task."

An angry light sprang into Davenant's eyes but his quick retort was interrupted by Reta's laughter. The insolence which Davenant so resented only caused her genuine amusement. She understood Tregonning and knew exactly what instinct prompted his words.

"A very difficult task, Mr. Tregonning, and one which you certainly would neither have performed nor attempted. But I am sure that Mr. Davenant will be successful."

The colour had come back to her face; her dark eyes shone like stars and the smile with which she turned to her lover softened and transfigured her whole face. In spite of himself she compelled Tregonning's admiration.

"I congratulate you, my dear young lady upon your confidence, and you, Mr. Davenant, upon your courage. Let us hope that neither will be disappointed. And now, I will wish you all good-morning." With an exaggerated bow Tregonning took his departure, drawing in his lips as he went. Just as he was leaving the house he ran against a tall gaunt figure who looked at him with haggard eyes. "Where is Miss Harriet?" she cried.

"In there," he said, pointing to the library, and with almost superhuman strength Mrs. Jennings pushed past Lizzy and entered the room.

When she saw Reta she smiled triumphantly, and Austin drew nearer to his betrothed, for he saw the glare of madness in the housekeeper's wild eyes.

"Have you told?" she cried, seizing the girl by the wrist. "I believe you heard all I said, and that you have come down here to tell."

"Tell me at once if you have done so."

"No, no," said Reta, scathingly. "I have not told."

Mrs. Jennings gave an exultant laugh. "Then I shall be the first to tell. It is my place. I am his mother; it is for me to tell how clever my son, Bill, has been."

She looked round the room with a ghastly smile, and went on:

"My old mistress, Mrs. Allen, was going to tell that Bill had forged the cheque instead of Horace Pendreare. The blame was fastened on to Horace and he had to escape, but it was Bill who had done it all along. And the old lady was going to tell, so Bill wrapped a scarf round her neck and killed her. And she," pointing a shaking hand towards Reta, "she heard me talking about it and wanted to come and tell you first; but it's me who should be proudest. He's my son, my clever boy."

Dify was succeeding horror in Reta's eyes. "Poor thing, it has turned her brain," she said.

Mrs. Jennings was speaking again. "I only guessed at first how clever he had been. I was not sure of anything. He never told his old mother till she asked him, but she knew there was no one else clever enough to have done it and got on so quietly by the French window. I had seen him that same evening, so I knew all about it. Ha! Ha! I know."

Her laugh was horrible to hear, and it gradually rose to a shriek.

"He's gone now. See, he sent me this letter, does not he write nicely? He is only a little boy."

She held out a scrap of paper, and Davenant took it from her and read the words:—

"I'm off to America. I can get a good job there. If she did hear and split they won't get me, so don't you worry, Mother. Good-bye!"

Mrs. Jennings, a terrible travesty of maternal pride, stood smiling, and bowing in the middle of the room.

Austin gently led her away and Mrs. Sims took charge of her until she was removed to an asylum.

"What was it that you overheard, Reta?" asked Austin later on.

"The first words I overheard when I was writing for James Tregonning were 'When I was ill, Bill, did I say anything about old Mrs. Allen's murder?' He replied, 'You pretty well gave the show away. If I had not found you a deaf nurse there would have been the devil to pay.' Then Mrs. Jennings said, 'So you did really kill her, Bill?' and he replied, 'Of course I did. I was not going to risk her telling that it was me, not Horace Pendreare who committed the forgery. I saw the old lady, as I told you I would, and tried to bind her to secrecy, but she said she could no longer allow an innocent man to suffer for a guilty, that she would be silent no more, so I killed her.'"

"That was all I overheard," added Reta. "Mrs. Jennings tried to make me swear I had not heard anything. I suppose the horror of it all has turned the poor thing's brain."

"I suppose Horace Pendreare was the young man who was run over when you mistook for me," observed Charlie, later.

"Evidently. He was exactly like you," said Reta. "Poor fellow! He was hardly treated. I am sorry for Mrs. Jennings, too. Do you think she will ever recover?"

"She may," put in Austin, "but it is doubtful."

"If she does I should like to set her mind at rest by telling her that I will never reveal what I know about her son. She loves him so, for her sake we must let him go. I know now what love may mean, what love may do."

Her voice broke and trembled as she turned to Pendreare. "If you will give me time I will repay all that I have spent, but I can never repay your generosity and forbearance. I can never thank you enough."

"My dear cousin, don't attempt to thank me. If you are going to begin to try, I must, take my departure."

With a pleasant laugh he strolled out into the garden and wandered on to the spreading moor.

Then Austin feeling that Reta's strength was spent, and that the tears were near, stooped and took her in his arms.

"Ah!" she whispered, "I owe you even more. How can you, knowing what I am, what I have done, how can you still wish me to be your wife?"

"Because I, too, have learned the power of love."

MARTIN'S APIOL & STEEL PILLS

SKIN DISEASES

Overcome by the Wonderful Blood Purifying Properties of Dr. MORSE'S INDIAN ROOT PILLS.

A person suffering from eruptions of the skin has much to endure. It is not merely the disfigurement and irritation and painful sensation, but life is made miserable by depression of spirits. The liver is torpid and the kidneys are partially inoperative, and you feel languid and weak. The disease is in the blood, and when the system is not cleansed through the usual channels, Nature asserts herself, and forces portions of the impurities through the skin in the form of Pimples, Boils and Blotches. External remedies—powders, ointments, lotions—only alleviate; they do not get at the cause. Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills get at the cause by removing the disease from the blood. They cleanse the system by stimulating the liver and strengthening the kidneys, which filter the blood and throw off the impure matter through the regular channels.

THE OUTSIDE QUALITY OF TRADE MARK
It is fully weather-resisting.
It may be applied on stone-work, brick-work, cement-work, wood, iron, or stone. It sets hard as cement, and withstands rain, sun and frost.
For interior decoration, Hall's Distemper is the modern improvement on wallpaper, giving a fireproof durable wall surface of great beauty, which will not fade nor change colour with age, and may be "Spring-cleaned" by lightly sponging with warm water.
No decorative material is made in the same wide range of colours as Hall's Distemper—70 beautiful art shades to select from.
Specify "Hall's Distemper Stippled" for interior decoration.
